un- (Un-), negat. prefix, same as Engl. un-, Lat. in-, Gr. an-.

The application of this privative prefix is unlimited: to give every possible case would amount to a dictionary by itself. No attempt will be made therefore to define all the words commencing with un-; only such as require a special explanation and those most frequently occurring will be given. Others will be found self-explaining, when Engl. un-, in-, or not is substituted for un- before the meaning of the second word. If the second word is a partiiple, its meaning may be sought under the verb to which it belongs. If it is a deriv. in -bar or -lich (not always used separately), its meaning may also be sought under the verb, the sense of able or capable being added. From all these, deriv. nouns in -heit are freely made.

LIST OF

GERMAN IRREGULAR VERBS.

The following list includes all the so-called 'irregular' verbs: that is to say, all the verbs of the Old (or strong) conjugation, along with those of the New (or weak) conjugation which do not follow the regular method of inflection. The latter class are distinguished by being put in ordinary type throughout. In the former class, forms given in full-faced type (thus, gedacht) are those which are alone in use; for those in ordinary type (thus, badst, badt), the more regular forms, or those made after the manner of the New conjugation, are also allowed. Forms enclosed in parenthesis are unusual or poetical or dialectic.

No verb is given in the list as a compound. Those which do not occur as simple verbs have hyphens prefixed to all their forms.
